

A Raise for Security Officers like Raquel is a Boost for Washington's Economy

9/11 taught us that private security officers are vital first responders in emergencies. Yet officers like Raquel who protect multi-million dollar properties often go home to the poorest neighborhoods.

Thanks to a new City Council bill, these brave men and women will receive the living wages and health benefits they need to better support their families.

Higher wages help reduce job turnover and enable workers to give back to their communities and local businesses through taxes and spending.

Making sure jobs are good jobs is the best way to address Washington's staggering poverty rate and ensure a brighter future for all.

SEIU Local 32BJ & City Council Members
United To Make Work Pay

Learn more about Local 32BJ's security campaign: www.seiu32bj.org